LANCASHIRE ROCK

Introduction

This document is an online resource to its companion BMC guidebook, Lancashire Rock. It gives all first ascent details for the routes contained in that book.

The decision was made to produce this information as a separate, freely-downloadable document in order to save space in the face of ever-increasing numbers of routes and more space being devoted to larger topos and photos.

It is also hoped that this can allow first ascent information, a notoriously changable series of “facts”, to be more dynamic and updatable as new information comes along.

The guidebook can be purchased from the BMC, www.thebmc.co.uk/shop.

If you have any information on the information contained here, please get in touch.

Although the first climbs in Lancashire were described by Laycock in 1913, which gives a timeline for some of the early climbing, by the early sixties there was still relatively little information about the routes themselves and even less about the climbing history. At that time, small groups of climbers were exploring their nearby gritstone quarries, but this was very informal and low key. The climbs they did were often not named, and even if they were, it was not considered necessary to record any descriptions, because those involved all had a good idea of the likely grades. Guides were produced to some of the quarries, but these were generally hand written or typed and only distributed fairly locally.

In 1967 Les Ainsworth, encouraged by Walt Unsworth, wrote an article in the Climber magazine entitled ‘The Unrealised Climbing Potential of Lancashire’ and this prompted some local activists to send details of several quarries spread throughout the old county of Lancashire. This then led to the first definitive guidebook dedicated to the area. However, it provided no historical information. Indeed, at the time, the idea of recording first ascent details was seen as an anathema to most Lancs climbers. As Al Evans once put it “What I like about Lancashire is that you just get down to the climbing, without seeking glory for doing the climbs”. Unfortunately, though some may see this as an admirable trait, the lack of record keeping meant that the historical record of Lancashire climbing was for a long time very much an oral one. Furthermore, it was often limited to very small groups of climbers, who were often unaware of previous climbing visits, apart from the odd peg that they found.

In the 1983 guidebook a first attempt was made to record the climbing history in print, by providing short historical summaries for each area. However, these details were limited and it was another three years before detailed first ascent information was provided for the new routes in a supplement by Phil Kelly and Dave Cronshaw. Phil subsequently went on to develop a fuller first ascent record, but whilst this was an excellent start, it was compiled twenty years after many of the climbs had been done. Thus, by that time memories had faded and many of those involved in developing Lancashire climbing could not be contacted, so inevitably there were gaps and inaccuracies.

Since then the first ascent record has been amended and updated and Phil must be thanked for helping with that. Nevertheless, it still remains incomplete. In particular, the best that can be claimed is that the current first ascent list is a reasonably accurate record of the first claimed ascents. So apologies to anyone who sees someone else’s name against a climb they did earlier, but if you do have an earlier claim, if routes you did are not attributed, or if you can supply any more details, please get in touch.

Format of First Ascent Lists

The first ascents are grouped here by areas, with the crags listed within each area. This also includes some crags and climbs that have been lost to infilling or requarrying over the years. However, whilst these climbs may no longer exist, they are still part of the historical record. So where a crag has been lost, a short summary has been given of the first recorded climbing and of any of the crags two or three star routes. Similarly, where individual routes are not recorded in the current definitive guidebook, these are identified by italics.

Finally, it is necessary to note that although this list was used to add the dates in the definitive guidebook, the first ascent list is continually being updated as climbers send in more information, so where there are discrepancies between the dates given, this list should be taken as the more accurate.

 1959-61 Inflexion (1 pt aid) Mick Pooler
Very Difficult and A2
"The last few feet above the 'peg' are climbed using pitons etc. Care is needed at the top as the holds are rather scarce and the grass is rather dubious."
Aid eliminated by Al Evans, 13 June 1976.
 1961 Aug Leftless (AI) Harry Taylor, Mick Pooler, as Twilight Crack
First free ascent by Al Evans, Brian Cropper, 1979.
 1961 Sep 19 Ha'penny Arête Mick Pooler (unseconded)
Severe and A3
"Starts at the bottom of the face under 'the Traverse' [of Scoop and Traverse]. Using holds on the face, the arête proper is gained. Here a delicate balance move brings one to a pleasant stance.

- From this stance a pull up on good holds brings one to the 'Collecting Box'. To attain this position it may be necessary to use one or both knees. The route now follows and finishes up Inflexion. Note: the first man will find the placing of the initial peg hard."*

Blackstone Edge – South Crag

The crag has been climbed on for many years. Probably all the easier climbs were done by a group that gathered round 'Ricky' Richardson. This included Len Mustoe, Hilary Harris, Gerald Partington, Tom Webster, John Hamer and Jack Rosbottom. The routes date from the late 40s/early 50s, but as was usual for those days, few records were kept and the little we do know comes from Len Mustoe's son Peter, who went on to contribute his own routes in the later development of the area. Some of the harder routes, such as Solitary may have been ascended first by Bruce Goodwin. These records are best regarded as first recorded ascents and date from visits Goodwin et al. during the 1990s.
